Parent-to-Parent Support

Parent-to-Parent support is a service, for parents whose children receive behavioral health services through AHCCCS, provided by a trained professional who is also the parent of a child with special needs. In Northern Arizona, these experienced parents and trained professionals are called Family Support Partners or FSPs.

Could an FSP be right for you? Learn more about how they can help below.

In the school system

A parent who advocated for their own child in the school system can support you in learning your rights and accessing the services your child needs to be academically successful.

In the home

A parent who successfully managed their child’s needs can assist you in organizing information and developing strategies for appointments with specialists and share helpful ideas to try at home.

In the community

A parent who knows what services are available in your community can help you access resources to support your family’s education, employment, housing, healthcare, childcare, and other needs.

If your family could use assistance in these areas or other areas, speak to your case manager about requesting this service or complete the attached self-referral form.
